OPIUM SMOKING.

Much has been written by learned authors of Europe in relation to the terrible effects of oppum smoking. American striets have also composed voluminous papers upon the same subject. In all instances China is spoken of as that place where the practice most prevails. Perhaps the Americans who have written so much in relation to the matter are not sware that in New York, the empire city of their country, there is situated an opium smoking saloon, which, for dirt, squaler and sliminess, can well rank with the most frequented dens of Canton.

In Donovan's lane, a miserable little alley, opening from Baxterstreet, a room is kept particularity and solely for the service of opium smokers. It is conducted by a withered old wreck, who, although only forty years of age, by his invetrate use of the drug, has the appearance of being at least seventy. The room, if it can be called such, is about twenty feet long by six wide; a slanting bent shelf is fixed lengthwise to one of the walls. This is long enough to allow a man of small stature to lie at full length, but not more than four persons could lie on it at a time. It is upon this that the opium smokers recline when inadiging their terrible longing. The place was visited a few evenings since, and was found occupied by two Chinese, one of them a very old man, and the other a youth, who stated that he had just been discharged from the United States steamer Juntata, upon which he had served as officer's steward. Both were smoking opium.

Many persons suppose that opium is Steamer Juniata, upon which he had served as officer's steward. Both were smoking opium.

Many persons suppose that opium is used in the same way that tobacco is. This, however, is a mistake. Tobacco can be smoked standing, walking and at basiness. The opium smoker always lies down when indulging his habit, and gives all his attention to the process of inhaling the fumes of the drug. Before opium can be used by the smoker it has to be prepared most carefully by persons skilled in its concection. It is reduced from a solid to a liquid form by botting with a small quantity of water, and when ready for the pipe looks like a thin paste of thick, muddy molasses. The opium pipe consists of a reed about an inch in diameter. The aperture in the bowl which admits the drug is not much larger than the head of a pin. One hundredth part of an ounce is all thatcan be smoked by a beginner. Old, debauchees however, can use from a quarter to a third of an ounce daily. Tobacco smokers always emit smoke from their mouths, but an old oppum smoker invariably blows the fames through his nostrils, and very often absorbs them in his lungs. A tobacco pipe can be easily lighted by a match or a coal of fire, but the opium pipe must be lighted with great care, and always by the steady flame of an ollowing the form of the drug that the fames are always and the fames through his nostrils, and very often absorbs them in his lungs. A total content of any old the fames through his nostrils, and very often absorbs them in his lungs. A total content of any old the fames through his nostrils, and very often absorbs them in his lungs. A total content of any old the fames through his nostrils, and very often absorbs them in his lungs. A total content of any old the fame of match or a coal of fire, but the opium pipe must be lighted with great care, and always by the steady flame of an oil lamp. The small opening in the bowl is held in the flame, and the light is drawn into the reel. After the opium is ignited the process of smoking is a very short one; only one or two whiffs can be taken, and in this way, lighting and smoking, scores of persons, inhabitants of this city, spend hour after hour, never crasing until they drop off into the death-like stupor which is the aim of all opium smoking.

death-like stupor which is the aim of all opium smoking.

Inveterate smokers live for nothing but the gratification of their appetites. When it cannot be satisfied they suffer tortures of the most horrible character. Those persons who become addicted to the use of the poison seidom live to more than fifty years of age; most of them die within five years after they have reached that stage in which they can consume a third of an ounce a day. The Chinese in this city admit that the effects of the drug upon the human frame are ruinous drug upon the numan frame are ruinous in the extreme; they argue, however, that in the extreme; they argue, however, that all nations indulge in some dissipation; the Americans, they say, drink whiskey until they are drunk, and they ask, if this be so, why is it wrong for a China-man to become senseless with opium? Those who live in New York are, with few exceptions, devoted to the practice of opiuta-smoking, and, what is far more terrible, a large number of young white girls, residing in their neighborhood, are rapidly becoming addicted to the same vice. They live with the Chinese when they can find no other home, for although the people of their own race close their doors against them, they are always wel-come at the firesides of those to whom they sell their souls for the sustenance of

HOW MY HUSBAND STOPPED

My husband knows I do not like his one bad habit—smoking. I used to urge him to give it up; he replied that "it helped his digestion, but he would give it up by-and-by." "By-and-by you won't be able." I said, but he "poohly poohed!" and so the matter dropped. A few evenings ago, however, making one of those "great efforts" that "led to noble ends," he said to me: "I've quit smoking, my dear." Of course I was delighted, and hugged and kissed him as any delighted little wife would, and inwardly resolved to go down town the very next day and buy him a haudsome pair of slippers. Two days, however, passed before I could manage it, but the third day found the slippers safely stowed away in my bureau drawers. After tea, when I knew he was in the sitting-room, I thought now is the time, when he will My husband knows I do not like his I thought now is the time, when he will be missing his accustomed smoke, to surprise him with "a token of his wife's appreciation of his self-denial." I had appreciation of his self-denial." I had been mentally preparing my little speech all the afternoon; so, with the slippers in my hands and my hands behind my back, I stole into the room. Yes, there he was, peor fellow! buried in the armchair, his feet very near the top of the coal stove, and the day's paper open before him. The back of his chair was toward me. so my arms were around his tore him. The back of his chair was toward me, so my arms were around his neck and the stippers in his lap before he was aware of my presence. He started and grew red, then recovering himself, he rose, and coolly knocking the ashes from the end of his cigar, said: "I just thought I'd let you see I could stop smoking."

OLD FRIENDS .- Old friends are like old boots. We never realize how perfectly they were fitted to us until they are cast aside, and others, finer and more stylinh, aside, and others, finer and more stylish, perhaps, but cramping and pinebing in every corner, are substituted. Then we are often forced to hunt up the worn articles from the attic where they have been thrown, and for a little season at least, rest our weary feet by wearing them. With our friends it is the same; after trying in vain to fit ourselves to the peculiarities of new ones, how often we go back with a sigh of relief to the dear people whose very faults may sometimes have been brought about by serving us.
